The evolution of citizenship rights in Iran and the world

Alireza Ravayi

1. Bachelor student of Urbanization, University of Shiraz, Faculty of art and Architecture, e-mail address (Mr.ravaee1975@gmail.com)

Abstract

Although citizenship rights have recently been raised in the legal literature of our country, it has a very long history. The study of the philosophy of citizenship rights helps us to understand the fundamentals and how this branch of rights is known so that the citizens of the community learn more about it. It is a new concept that focuses specifically on equality and justice, and has found a special place in social, political and legal ideas. The category of "Citizenship" becomes accessible when it comes to the full enjoyment of all civil and political rights by all individuals in a community, as well as easy access to the opportunities offered by life in economic and social terms. In addition, citizens participate as members of a community in different fields and take on responsibilities for better governance and ordering society, and recognizing these rights and duties has an important role in promoting citizenship and creating a community The basis of order and justice. Islam, as a comprehensive religion that addresses all aspects of human life, has clear and clear instructions for the social relations of human beings, not only to the spiritual perfection of humans, but also to how to build a representative society. One of the important issues of civil rights in Islam is the attention paid to the dignity of humans as the top creatures, the value of life and life of individuals, equality regardless of race, color, skin, etc., aiming at the grafting of human beings and the futility of human life. The purpose of this study is to investigate the evolution of citizenship rights in Iran and the world. The aim of this research is to explore this concept using existing library resources and descriptive analytical method.

Key words: citizen, citizen's rights, evolution, civil rights, political rights, social rights

1. Introduction (Times New Roman 14pt in Bold)

Citizenship is the derivatives of the city. Citizenship is considered an advanced form of "urbanization." According to some experts, city dwellers have been promoted to "citizen" when they respect each other's rights and act on their responsibilities to the city and community. Citizenship was previously studied in the urban social sphere, but after that, citizenship has expanded its concepts to the state and the state, although many today are thinking about global citizenship. Citizenship today has different uses and meanings.